Mission

The mission of Mennonite College of Nursing is to educate undergraduate and graduate nursing students to serve the citizens of Illinois, the nation, and the global community. Mennonite College of Nursing acknowledges a particular responsibility to address the nursing and health-care needs of urban and rural populations, including those who are vulnerable and underserved. The College of Nursing builds upon the educational foundation previously acquired by students. The college creates a dynamic community of learning in which reflective thinking and ethical decision-making are valued. The college is committed to the promotion of nursing scholarship at the national and international levels through research, service, and practice. Mennonite College of Nursing is committed to being purposeful, open, just, caring, disciplined, and celebrative.
Mennonite College of Nursing became Illinois State University’s sixth academic college on July 1, 1999. The rich heritage of Mennonite College of Nursing began in 1919. For more than 85 years, the primary mission has been to prepare professional nurses by providing a quality education. This mission continues at Illinois State. Mennonite College of Nursing is located in Edwards Hall.

A message from the dean

Mennonite College of Nursing at Illinois State University continues to excel in its focus on gerontology and aging. This past year, the Expanding Teaching Nursing Home Project team has continued to accomplish its objectives in educating students, faculty, nurses and the public about long-term care. The positive effects of this project are outstanding, and I have decided to feature the efforts of this team in the past year in this issue of the Annual Report.

We are also another step further in the approval process for a Ph.D. in nursing degree program at Illinois State. The Board of Trustees granted approval this past May, and now the program proposal is being reviewed by the Illinois Board of Higher Education. We anticipate approval in 2008.

The college is busy upgrading technology, and thanks to a grant from State Farm Insurance Companies, the college was able to update the computer lab with new equipment. Also, we appreciate COUNTRY Insurance & Financial Services for their generous gift, and the Friends Steering Committee for their fund-raising success for “BabySim,” which was recently purchased for the clinical lab.

This past year has been very successful for faculty and staff at Mennonite College of Nursing. Their dedication to teaching, research, service and practice helps the college fulfill its mission. We greatly appreciate all of the support from alumni, friends and donors – on behalf of the college, I thank you. We would not be able to accomplish all of the wonderful things without your support.

I am so proud of our faculty, staff, alumni, friends and donors and hope you enjoy reading about all of the accomplishments Mennonite College of Nursing has achieved in 2006-07. Mennonite College of Nursing is definitely the place to be!

Sara L. Campbell, DNS, RN, CNAA, BC
Interim Dean and Professor

Robert Wood Johnson Health Policy Fellow

Nancy Ridenour, Ph.D., RN, APRN, BC, FAAN, has been named a Robert Wood Johnson Health Policy Fellow, and will spend time in the nation’s capital helping shape American health care policy. In July, Ridenour stepped down as dean of Mennonite College of Nursing at Illinois State University, and Sara Campbell, DNS, RN, CNAA, BC was appointed interim dean.

This three-year Fellowship began with a 12-week orientation. Ridenour will meet key executive branch officials responsible for health policy and programs, members of Congress and their staffs, and representatives of health-related interest groups. After the orientation session, Ridenour will go through an interview process, and in January of 2008 she will begin her appointment as a congressional staff member.
Research

The faculty at Mennonite College of Nursing at Illinois State University place high importance on providing quality nursing education built on a strong foundation of the most current research and clinical knowledge. This year’s annual report showcases many examples of faculty commitments to building nursing knowledge and clinical expertise. Faculty members Catherine Kaesberg, MSN, RN and Rita Schlomer, MS, RN, APN, CCNS are within the first group of nurses in the nation to be certified as Clinical Nurse Leaders. In the area of research, Pam Lindsey, DNSc, RN and Wendy Woith, Ph.D., RN were selected to receive nationally competitive post-doctoral fellowships.

This strong commitment by our faculty to build clinical expertise and generate nationally recognized nursing scholarship assures that all students attending MCN receive the very best in nursing education.

Professor and Director of the Graduate Program, Research and Scholarly Activities

Development

Our students, faculty and alumni continue to live the mission of our founders. In reading “The Passing of the Flame,” by Robert Cassel, I discovered that in 1928, the Rev. Troyer asked the Alumni Association to pledge $10,000 toward a capital campaign. In 1928, $10,000 was a lot of money! It only took one year, and the alumni achieved that goal. Today, Illinois State undergraduates interested in nursing and our nursing students call on alumni to support the annual fund and scholarship funds, and every year, alumni respond. In fiscal year 2007, over 25 percent of our alumni responded positively to our student callers, and over $20,000 was raised in support of our annual fund drive.

In addition to our annual fund, others are responding to the call to help students have access to an excellent nursing education. Several have created legacies for those they love. The children of Dave and Jo Wiant; Mike, Susan, Chris, and Eric, created a nursing scholarship in their parents’ name. Dave and Jo Wiant pledged additional support through a planned gift. Alma Stoddard created an endowment in the name of her beloved brother, Paul Stoddard. His legacy will live on at the Mennonite College of Nursing through a scholarship in his name. Their stories will be told and remembered. Because of these gifts, many students will be helped and many patients will receive great nursing care.

You don’t need to be Bill Gates, Warren Buffet or Oprah Winfrey to leave a legacy. The most common legacy gifts are gifts of life insurance or a partial designation as a beneficiary of a retirement plan. These gifts can fit into most estate plans and do not require an attorney. The next most common form of a legacy gift is a will designation, which requires an attorney but allows you to divide an estate among multiple heirs and charities.

If you would like to make a legacy gift to the Mennonite College of Nursing, to make a lasting difference in nursing, or you have already made plans for the College in your estate plans and need to ensure its proper designation, please let us know. Such gifts will not only leave a legacy but impact heath care for generations.

Innovative Teaching Nursing Home Project Prepares Nurses for Health Care Challenges Ahead

By Bob Aaron

The statistics tell the story. Illinois’ population is aging. And, America is getting older, too, as the post-World War II baby boomers move into their golden years.

Just seven years ago, at the turn of the 21st century, 12 percent of Illinois’ population was age 65 or older. But, by 2025, it’s forecast that 16.6 percent of the Land of Lincoln’s populace will fall into that age group—a population cluster increasingly dependent upon long-term medical services.

Nationwide there were 37.3 million persons age 65 or older in 2006, representing 12.4 percent of the U.S. population, according to the federal Administration on Aging. But, by 2030, this group is expected to grow to 71.5 million, more than twice their number in 2000.

Staggering new and costly long-term health care challenges will be faced by Washington, Springfield and the other 49 state capitals, the health care and insurance industries, and individual families as the U.S. population ages.

Consequently, Mennonite College of Nursing (MCN) is taking a visible leadership role to prepare the nursing community for the geriatric health care environment ahead. MCN and Heritage Enterprises, Inc., a leading nursing home care provider in Central and Northern Illinois, have teamed up on an innovative project, Expanding the Teaching-Nursing Home Culture in the State of Illinois. The venture is funded by a five-year, $1.48 million grant from the Illinois Department of Public Health (IDPH).

“The project’s purpose,” explained Charlene Aaron, MCN’s project coordinator, “is to transform long-term care throughout Illinois. We want to make working in long-term care facilities more attractive to nursing graduates and we want to empower long-term care nurses at Heritage and the Illinois State nursing faculty.”

Long-term care must be transformed because “a collision is about to happen” as the number of baby boomers increases and the number of nurses decreases, according to Donovan Gardner, a retired nursing home administrator and consultant, who serves on the Expanding Teaching Nursing Home Project Advisory Council.

Aaron, who worked in long-term care for years before joining the Illinois State faculty, believes that empowerment will come from the project’s focus on continuing education of nurses already on the job and through building creative partnerships with long-term care providers like Heritage. She also is focused on enticing more students into geriatrics and that’s one reason why MCN is offering students clinical experiences at Heritage facilities in Bloomington, Colfax, El Paso, and Normal. Over the years, between 30 and 70 students annually have worked in these nursing homes.
Managing a Culture Change

It’s not your grandmother’s nursing home.

As baby boomers morph into senior citizens, their lifestyles likely will have a profound effect on long-term care in the future—effects that will go well beyond demands for private rooms, Internet connections, satellite TV, and flexible meal times.

“A culture change is going on in nursing homes,” explained Mary Dyck, an assistant professor at the Mennonite College of Nursing at Illinois State University. “Nursing homes will have to offer a more home-like atmosphere. Baby boomers don’t want a standard room and they may want breakfast at 9 in the morning, rather than at 7.”

These looming changes, Dyck said, are “market-driven. Baby boomers won’t accept cookie-cutter care. Long-term care hasn’t operated in that mindset.”

Kimberly Mau ’96, director of nursing programs at Kankakee Community College, shares that view.

“Care of the older population,” she explained, “has been seen as end-of-life care, rather than giving care to people as they live their lives. It’s a hard concept to grasp. The Expanding Teaching Nursing Home Project gives us the tools to make that culture change—to change perceptions and opinions about long-term care.”

Today, nursing homes are built on a hospital model, explained retired nursing home administrator and consultant Donovan Gardner, and that model largely is driven by the requirements of Medicare.

Donovan sees an evolution unfolding, where the emphasis at nursing homes is shifting from nursing to homes.

“This evolution,” Donovan explained, “is an effort to break away from a medical model to a social model. Some facilities are developing ‘green house’ programs, introducing more plants and pets.”

A neighborhood concept is gaining popularity, he explained, where residential rooms are clustered around a social area for small groups of residents. And, these clusters are grouped into neighborhoods. He sees nurses working more like home health nurses and residents having a hand in menu planning.

“The demands of baby boomers will be different than the residents we are taking care of now,” said Rose Stadel, an executive with Heritage Enterprises, Inc., a long-term care provider. “They are going to want more choices, they are going to want more freedom—that’s what they’re used to.”
available study topics are pain management in the elderly, incontinence, wound management, and polypharmacy.

“I’ve been a nurse for 30 years,” Aaron said, “and I learn every day. These modules ensure that nurses are using the best practices to help ensure positive outcomes for patients in handling things like managing medications and how to prevent falls.”

The modules have been approved by the Illinois Nurses Association for continuing education credits and were created to help prepare nurses for certification in gerontological nursing by the American Nurses Credentialing Center.

• Building Networks. MCN is reaching out to community colleges across Illinois to build a nursing network to address the educational needs of nurses with associate degrees, personnel needs of long-term care facilities, and to help construct a pipeline of nurses interested in obtaining bachelor’s degrees. Programs have been conducted in partnership with Heartland, Kankakee, and Kaskaskia community colleges.

“There is enthusiasm and excitement about collaborating on these networking opportunities,” said Catherine Miller, associate dean of Health and Human Services at Heartland Community College with campuses in Normal, Pontiac, and Lincoln. “We encourage our graduates to return to school to get bachelor’s degrees in nursing. We encourage our students to be lifelong learners and to continue their education.”

Kimberly Mau ’96, director of nursing programs at Kankakee Community College (KCC), said, “It was very exciting to have the opportunity to host the consortium and for the Mennonite College of Nursing to share their information with us so we can start our own ball rolling here.”

Shortly after the May 3, 2007, consortium meeting at KCC, Mau met with representatives of Provena Senior Services, an organization based in Mokena, Ill., that operates 16 long-term care and other facilities in north central Illinois, to explore the possibility of launching a relationship similar to the Mennonite-Heritage association.

“With the declining number of nursing faculty,” Mau explained, “we need to be innovative in setting up learning experiences and establishing creative partnerships.”

The Expanding Teaching Nursing Home Project has an important philosophical goal. “There is a pervasive perception in society,” Aaron explained, “that aging is a negative thing. We have to change that perception by presenting aging as “cool” and a time in life when there are opportunities.”

Part of that change in perception, Aaron said, is empowering students with knowledge to teach their clients about wellness as an approach to improving health.

Using Art in Long-Term Health Care

New York’s famed Museum of Modern Art was the site of a big lesson in long-term health care for the elderly one day in May 2005.

“It was a memorable experience,” recalled Rose Stadel, director of operations for Central Illinois for Heritage Enterprises, Inc., a long-term health care provider, and Mennonite College of Nursing’s partner in the innovative Expanding Teaching Nursing Home Project (ETNHP). “We couldn’t stop talking about it—and what we were going to do when we got back.”

What happened was this. MCN representatives traveled to New York on a fact-finding trip as part of the Summer Independent Study Toward Elder Research Project (S.I.S.T.E.R), which is part of ETNHP. They went on an outing with adult day care center residents to the museum, where a curator described various artworks and engaged them in discussion.

“Most of the day care center residents,” recalled Charlene Aaron, ETNHP project coordinator, “couldn’t express themselves as they used to because of dementia, but they talked about what the artist had in mind and the use of color. It was impressive. Their caregivers were moved.

“Being in the museum,” Aaron explained, “was a wonderful intervention for people with dementia and Alzheimer’s disease. It calmed their behavior and stimulated their thought and communications. It put them in an environment where they were challenged and engaged them so they were more like the people they were before the disease took over.”

The experience was replicated at Illinois State, when eight to 10 Heritage nursing home residents visited the University’s art gallery.

“The experience was just as good as in New York,” Stadel said. “We listened to their interpretation of what they were seeing. They talked about having graduated from ISNU [Illinois State Normal University] and how some of their parents had taught there. It brought out so many stories. They had so much fun. The interaction was really good.”

“Now, we’re thinking of doing it twice a year,” Stadel said.
The nursing home project also is placing a premium on a preceptor program, which is a structured orientation program for new nurses in long-term care. The effort, Aaron said, will help recruit and retain nursing professionals in long-term care. This initiative was launched at the Heritage facility in Normal.

“One nurse works with new nurses,” according to Aaron, “to get them comfortable before they fly solo. In this program, the new nurses do simulations and various scenarios to see how they would handle this and that. Preceptors grade the new nurses.”

Plans are afoot to expand the preceptor program to Heritage facilities in Bloomington and El Paso, Ill. MCN’s partnership with Heritage, which owns 22 long-term care facilities and manages another 10, all in Illinois, has given Illinois State nursing students a real-world laboratory to hone their nursing skills.

“The residents love them,” explained Rose Stadel, director of operations for Heritage’s central region. “The residents’ families are pleased to see that we have a relationship with the college.”

Heritage provides the students with a place to sharpen their leadership, health assessment, medication administration, and other professional skills.

“With new admissions,” Stadel said, “they do initial assessments, they look at care plans, and they interact with other employees.”

The Expanding Teaching Nursing Home Project is operating in an environment facing a trio of stiff challenges, according to Stadel: staffing, funding, and technology.

“One reason Heritage has affiliated with the Mennonite College of Nursing is in the hope that students will have a good experience and it will encourage them to pursue careers in long-term care. “Funding,” Stadel added, “especially reimbursement from Medicare, Medicaid, and private insurers” is another challenge due to a series of very complicated rules as well as the cost of care, which might run as much as $120 to $150 a day.

However, Stadel also sees a trend line among baby boomers, where that demographic group is increasingly tending to invest in long-term care insurance.

A third challenge Stadel sees on the long-term care horizon is the constant need to keep up with changes in technology.

“Our relationship with the Mennonite College of Nursing is a win-win situation,” she said. “We provide opportunities for students and the Mennonite faculty and staff are great resources for us. The relationship benefits our residents—it gives them a higher quality of care and that’s what it’s all about.”

It’s a family affair

by Bob Aaron

Dave Wiant’s four children mused over what to get their dad for his 80th birthday. They finally found that perfect present, but it wasn’t at the shopping mall or at a travel agency. The special gift was an endowed scholarship in the name of their father and mother, David and Joan. The scholarship is earmarked for students attending Illinois State University—a gift that will keep giving for generations.

Wiant is a retired assistant vice president for administrative services at Illinois State University. He first came to campus in 1958 and retired in 1986.

Recalling how the idea took shape for the Wiant Endowed Scholarship for the Mennonite College of Nursing, he said: “It was the kids’ idea. They were trying to figure out what to give me for my 80th birthday. They were aware of the pride I took in the Mennonite College of Nursing (MCN) and in Illinois State as well.” The scholarship was established in July 2006.

His vision for the endowment, Wiant said, is for it to reach $100,000. “Every birthday, the kids contribute to the scholarship fund,” he said. “It’s a family affair. All of us are involved.” Wiant is looking forward to 2008 when the first scholarships funded by the endowment might be awarded.

Wiant is a computer information specialist with the Illinois Department of Agriculture, graduated from Normal Community High School.

Wiant’s children were aware of the fact that their father planned to leave a life insurance policy to MCN upon his death.

“I was going to do that,” Wiant explained, “in part because my mother was a graduate of the first class of the Army School of Nursing in 1917 at Walter Reed Hospital. I took pride in her profession and I’m proud that the Mennonite College of Nursing is part of Illinois State University.”

MCN is a significant addition to Illinois State, Wiant said, “and it’s nice to have my family be a part of it.”

Wiant takes a philosophical view toward life, noting: “You can enjoy a longer life when you keep busy doing things for other people.”

Doing things for other people is part of a Wiant family tradition. He recalled growing up during the Great Depression in Brookings, South Dakota, where his father was on the faculty of what was then known as South Dakota State College. He learned then that looking out and caring for others was very important.

Applying that same culture of philanthropy to his commitment to the Wiant family endowment, he remarked: “We could have spent our money on other things, but we’d rather leave our legacy to the University where it might help others.”

“…my mother was a graduate of the first class of the Army School of Nursing in 1917 at Walter Reed Hospital. I took pride in her profession and I’m proud that the Mennonite College of Nursing is part of Illinois State University. MCN is a significant addition to Illinois State, and it’s nice to have my family be a part of it.”
Supporting education to improve life

by Bob Aaron

That’s why Alma Stoddard established the Paul Stoddard Endowment in June 2006 to support student scholarships in the Mennonite College of Nursing at Illinois State University.

Alma Stoddard, an assistant professor emerita in the health, physical education, and recreation department, was a faculty member at Illinois State for about 15 years before retiring in 1982.

She established the endowment to honor her brother, Paul, who died at age 23 in 1947 after succumbing to colitis and infectious jaundice. “I have an affinity for the College of Nursing,” Stoddard said, “due to my brother’s illness.

“The Mennonite College of Nursing,” she added, “selects top-quality students. Many of them are honor students and they do outstanding work. They will help improve the quality of life of those they serve.”

Two scholarships already have been awarded to nursing students as a result of the Paul Stoddard Endowment. One of the recipients is Marie Deffner ’08, a senior majoring in nursing from Normal.

“When I learned about Alma,” Deffner said, “it put things in perspective. She is so giving and so compassionate.”

Deffner told The Pantagraph: “When I got into nursing school, I was the only one interested in geriatrics,” adding that pediatrics, obstetrics and gynecology, and neonatal intensive care were popular areas for nursing students.

After she graduates from Illinois State, Deffner told The Pantagraph, she plans to work in a nursing home for a couple of years before earning a master’s degree in geriatric nursing. Ultimately, she wants to work with patients with dementia and conditions such as Alzheimer’s disease.

Stoddard read The Pantagraph article about Deffner, noting “what a good feeling she gets from working with older people.”

Deffner said she felt profound gratitude about receiving the Stoddard scholarship. “I feel special,” she said, “and I appreciate it.”

Amy Ducharme ’07, another recipient of the Stoddard scholarship, is employed at the Rush University Medical Center in Chicago as a nurse on the pediatrics floor.

“My family,” Ducharme recalled, “was so proud and excited when I received the scholarship. They knew how much nursing means to me.”

Ducharme pursued a career in nursing, she said, because “I really want to work with people. I want to compassionately help people and take care of people.”

Ducharme said that she “loved the nursing program” at Illinois State, noting that the faculty at the Mennonite College of Nursing is “so into teaching” and very close to their students.

“Class sizes are small,” she explained, “so you can really focus and get hands-on experience with your teachers.”

Ducharme rates the Mennonite faculty as outstanding because they are “dedicated and you can really tell that they love what they’re doing. The professors would help you out no matter what—that’s the way it is at Mennonite.”

Ducharme also was a recipient of the Geriatric Excellence Award, which required her to write an essay about a seminal experience that influenced her career choice. Her composition focused on her grandfather and the hospice care he received in his waning days in 2002.

“He had a hospice nurse,” Ducharme recalled, “who made sure that he was cared for and comfortable.”

Ducharme said she was impressed by the fact that Alma Stoddard, a retired faculty member, had decided to invest in the Mennonite College of Nursing as a way to honor the memory of her brother.

“I want to thank her for the award,” Ducharme said, “and I will keep the award in mind throughout my career in the nursing profession.”

Ducharme’s long-term goals are to gain some practical work experience and then in a year or two to return to school to earn a master’s degree as a nurse practitioner.

2007 Scholarship Luncheon

Mennonite College of Nursing appreciates all of the financial assistance provided by various scholarships to students pursuing a career in nursing. Individuals who endow private scholarships to Mennonite College of Nursing are invited to an annual scholarship luncheon to meet with the recipient(s) of their generous gifts. In April, President Al Bowman and 46 private scholarship donors and scholarship recipients attended the event.

It’s a … SimBaby!

A big thank you to COUNTRY Insurance & Financial Services, the MCN Friends Steering Committee, and Dave and Karen Magers (class of ’79) for helping raise money for the college to purchase a SimBaby. SimBaby is a full-scale infant patient simulator that will allow nursing students to practice pediatric emergency skills and scenarios.

Accelerated B.S.N. Update

In January of 2007, the first group of students was admitted into an accelerated B.S.N. option at Mennonite College of Nursing. This option is designed for second degree students. These students will complete their course work and graduate in December 2007. The accelerated B.S.N. was funded by a U.S. Department of Labor grant written by Sue Deason of Extended University. MCN will offer the accelerated B.S.N. option again in 2008, offered in conjunction with Extended University at Illinois State and the McLean County Chamber of Commerce. The number of students accepted for 2008 has doubled to 20.

Clinical Nurse Leader

In the fall of 2007, Mennonite College of Nursing offered a new sequence in the graduate program. The clinical nurse leader (CNL) will prepare students to function as leaders who will improve patient care and safety within complex health care environments. Partners in education and health care practices collaborated to develop the CNL role. MCN collaborated with BroMenn Regional Medical Center in Normal and OSF St. Joseph Medical Center in Bloomington to prepare the CNL. The first students in the CNL sequence will be nurses from each of the institutions, which have committed to hiring CNL graduates from MCN.

Cathi Kaesberg and Rita Schlomer are instructional assistant professors at MCN who went through the process to become certified clinical nurse leaders this past summer. The national pass rate for this exam is approximately 84 percent. Brenda Recchia Jeffers, Ph.D., RN, director of Graduate Programs and Research, said, “The CNL is a provider and manager of care at the patient’s bedside. The CNL has additional educational preparation in outcomes-based practice and quality improvement to ensure high-quality care delivery. I am so pleased that two of our faculty are certified in this practice area.”
Elizabeth Carlson, Ph.D., MPH, APRN, BC, assistant professor

Dr. Elizabeth Carlson is a certified gerontological nurse practitioner and clinical specialist in community health nursing. She joined Mennonite College of Nursing as an assistant professor in 2007. Carlson teaches nursing research in the undergraduate program, and co-teaches several family nurse practitioner courses in the graduate program. She also has provided assistance to the Expanding Teaching Nursing Home Project.

How did you become interested in nursing and gerontology?
I got interested in nursing when I was in high school and worked as a candystriper and nurse’s aide (what would now be called a CNA). After high school, I worked for a number of years as a unit clerk in various hospitals. I married, had children, and went back to college when the youngest was 2.

I became interested in advanced practice after a particular patient died. I was determined to have more control over the care patients received. In the hospital setting, I observed that as many as 75 percent of the patients would not have needed to be hospitalized if someone had intervened sooner.

Where did you go to school?
I did all my schooling at the University of Texas Health Science Center at Houston, which is the largest health science center in the world (Texas is big on being big). I got my BSN from the School of Nursing in 1994.

I was the third graduate of a dual MSN/MPH program that was offered by the School of Nursing and the School of Public Health. At the School of Nursing, I was in the gerontological nurse practitioner track and the adult nurse practitioner tract. At the School of Public Health, I was in the community health tract, graduating in 1997.

As a doctoral student, I was awarded a pre-doctoral fellowship from the University of Texas M.D. Anderson Cancer Center, which provided me with salary and educational expenses for three years while I attended the doctor of science in nursing (DSN) program at the UTHSCH School of Nursing. I graduated in 2003. They recently changed my degree to a Ph.D.

I am certified as a gerontological nurse practitioner (GNP) and a clinical nurse specialist (CNS) in community health nursing.

Before joining MCN, where did you work?
From 1997 to 2000, I worked as a GNP for a hospital system that opened a geriatric outpatient office for older adults. From 2000 to 2005, I operated my own practice, Visiting Health Care, seeing patients in their homes. These were, of course, older adults with multiple chronic diseases. This was a real eye-opening experience, as most of my clients had been patients of the outpatient clinic and I’d known them for years. Now I was seeing them in their homes and neighborhoods and realized just how much we do not know when we see patients only in the clinic setting.

After I earned my doctorate, I was awarded a three-year, full-time doctoral research fellowship at M.D. Anderson Cancer Center in the Department of Cancer Prevention. I continued to develop my research skills and continued my work at the community level to develop systems of care for older adults.

Why is it important to have nursing students consider gerontology as a specialty?
From a practical perspective, unless you go specifically into a pediatric practice, you will be working with aging adults. Gerontology is the study of aging and geriatric practice, whether medicine or nursing, is focused on managing the spectrum of complexity as older adults age. That spectrum changes, depending on whether you are working with a healthier outpatient clientele, those living in assisted living facilities, or those living in a nursing home setting. That complexity includes not only the functional well-being of the patient, but also the family or caretakers.

What research projects are you working on at MCN?
My main research interests have focused around cancer, culture, and health disparities. The cultural piece has centered on developing the idea of social capital and what that concept means to collaborative relationships. When I was in Houston, that focus came from working with neighborhood communities. Now that I’ve moved to MCN, I see a perfect fit working with the Expanded Teaching Nursing Home Project to get evidence-based practice into long-term care. The underlying ingredient for success is engaging everyone in collaborative best practice initiatives.

I’ve also been involved with developing the curriculum for the gerontological nurse practitioner program, which was one of the objectives of the ETNH grant. The curriculum has passed through College Council and the University level. We will admit our first students for their first course in summer 2008.
Mary Cranston, MS, RN, instructional assistant professor

When Mary Cranston was about 5 years old, she remembers visiting her grandmother, who had hardening of the arteries, in a nursing home.

“I remember during one visit, my grandmother was going on and on about how it was raining in the room. My mother just cried and cried. I went to the closet, got out an umbrella, opened it and sat on the bed with my grandmother. She was fine after that and we had a lovely conversation.”

Although she didn’t know it at the time, such experiences would spark Cranston’s interest in gerontology.

Growing up, Cranston never dreamed of becoming a nurse. She wanted to be a teacher. When she was in high school, her friends asked her to be a candy striper with them at Methodist Medical Center in Peoria, Ill. Although she wasn’t interested, being a good friend, she agreed.

“I remember my first day was spent with a gentleman who was actively dying, confused and then comatose,” she said. “This experience got me hooked on nursing. The irony of this story is my friends who wanted to be nurses went to college and are now teachers, and I am now a nurse.”

When asked about her interest in gerontology, Cranston said, “I think my interest in gerontology began with my grandmothers. Of all the people who can give you insight into the past and a window of what life will be like in the future, it is older adults. They have so much to draw from and so much to teach us if we only give them the chance. They are my sociologists, theologians and historians as well as practical advisors.”

Cranston received her B.S.N. from the University of Iowa School of Nursing. She took additional courses in gerontology to enhance her studies in nursing. She received her master’s of science degree in gerontological nursing. Cranston participated in an internship at the Rush Alzheimer’s Family Care Center, an adult day center established to assist families in keeping their loved ones with dementia at home.

In 2003, Cranston accepted a position at Mennonite College of Nursing as an instructional assistant professor. She teaches several courses in the undergraduate program.

“I feel very fortunate to work at Mennonite College of Nursing,” she said. “It gives me the opportunity to work with a strong, insightful group of nurses and teachers who constantly strive to teach nursing more effectively and creatively. It is an honor and privilege to work with them.”

Cranston participated in the Summer Independent Study Toward Elder Research (S.I.S.T.E.R.) project for the Expanding Teaching Nursing Home Project as the initial faculty participant. She was selected to participate in the Geriatric Nursing Education Consortium in the fall of 2007. The national initiative is designed to enhance and solidify geriatric curriculum in nursing education. She also presented at the 39th Biennial Convention for Sigma Theta Tau in November 2007.

Cranston recommends gerontology to everyone who enjoys people.

“Older adults are such a resource to us all with gifts and insights that only add to your own life,” she said.

BroMenn Endowed Professor Update

by Sandra Burke, Ph.D., RN, BroMenn endowed assistant professor

The 2006 – 2007 academic year was a busy time for projects at BroMenn Regional Medical Center. The survey of nurses’ attitudes, beliefs and evidence-based practice patterns (EBP) was completed in August and the results shared in a series of articles in the BroMenn Times.

During the summer and fall, we worked together to identify appropriate venues for presenting the EBP work done at BroMenn, and followed that up by writing and submitting abstracts for presentations at local, regional and national conferences.

Many of our abstracts were accepted for presentation. In January, Pam Bierbaum presented our poster on reducing central line infections in ICU patients at the first annual NDNQI conference in Las Vegas. The following month, Pam and I traveled to Phoenix to present a paper on a successful change process used to reduce surgical site infections at BroMenn.

The first Annual Evidence-Based Practice Conference at Illinois State was held in February. The Mennonite College of Nursing and the Xi Pi, Theta Pi, Tau Omicron, and Epsilon Epsilon chapters of Sigma Theta Tau International Nursing Honor Society co-sponsored the event with BroMenn.

The first Annual Evidence-Based Practice Conference at Illinois State was held in February. The Mennonite College of Nursing and the Xi Pi, Theta Pi, Tau Omicron, and Epsilon Epsilon chapters of Sigma Theta Tau International Nursing Honor Society co-sponsored the event with BroMenn.

The conference featured Drs. Bernadette Melnyk and Ellen Fineout-Overholt who spoke to a sell-out crowd of more than 500 students and practicing RNs. BroMenn nurses presented a number of posters at the event. In April, Beth Objartel presented a poster at the 14th annual national EBP conference at the University of Iowa and I presented two of our posters at the annual research day at Springfield Memorial Medical Center.

I continue to chair the Council for Evidence Based Practice and Research and work with the unit-based journal clubs. In March, the Same Day Surgery Journal Club nurses began a comprehensive review of literature on the topic of local anesthesia to reduce the pain of IV catheter insertions. Based on their findings, work began to design a replication research study. Their work was summarized into an abstract and submitted for poster presentation at the ninth annual EBP conference in Phoenix.
Computer Lab Updated

By Jeff Grabb, associate director of technology

Mennonite College of Nursing at Illinois State University held a celebration on February 20, 2007, with faculty, staff, students and special guests to reveal the updated computer lab in Edwards Hall. This update was made possible in part by funding from State Farm Companies Foundation.

The computer lab originally had only 16 computers for student use. This proved to be insufficient to support MCN’s growth and the continued improvement of the success plan. The success plan is a Web-based testing regimen overseen by a faculty mentor and designed to help nursing students develop skills that will help them in passing their licensure exam (NCLEX).

State Farm funding was used to purchase computers and furniture, upgrade wiring and perform computer lab maintenance. Funds also were used to purchase servers, storage, software, and wiring that support the college in administering the success plan.

Students now have access to 24 seats, a 50 percent increase. Also, the room had started to look dated and didn’t reflect the modern nursing environment. This was changed with new desks and chairs, which helped make the lab more functional and attractive.

Most of the lab updates were completed in the summer of 2006. This included 26 new desks that can be reconfigured for computing or for traditional instruction by lowering the LCD screens. Also, 26 computers and screens were installed. Part of this process included adding network and power connections to the lab.

A new projector bright enough to be visible in most light conditions was added. In December of 2006, Illinois State’s Classroom Technology Support Services collaborated with MCN to complete a cart that made the projector capable of displaying laptop, computer, DVD or video information on the main screen. The computer lab’s videoconferencing system was re-installed, allowing the use of the projector and other technologies within the room.

All of the nursing programs utilize the computer lab, whether it’s for technology training, orientation, research, videoconferencing or basic computer access. Thanks to State Farm Companies Foundation, the computer lab was redesigned as a multi-use space that benefits the education of nurses.

Collaborative Doctoral Program: Caring for Older Adults

By Jennie Collings, program associate, collaborative doctoral program

The second year of the Collaborative Doctoral Program (CDP) grant was a busy and very productive sequence of events. The main focus of the year’s efforts was seeking approval for the doctor of philosophy in nursing proposal, and behind that very visible product was a host of projects designed to accomplish additional grant objectives.

The Ph.D. program description, curriculum, and policies were approved by the Mennonite College of Nursing (MCN) Graduate Program Curriculum Committee and College Council in the fall of 2006. After approval within the College, the process moved to the University level: Graduate School, Academic Senate and Board of Trustees, respectively. All three of these governing bodies approved the proposal in the spring of 2007.

“The proposal for the Ph.D. in nursing is intellectually rigorous and academically solid,” said Dr. Kimberly Nance, director of graduate studies at Illinois State. “Moreover, the new doctoral program will help to address urgent local, state, national, and indeed international needs for professors and researchers in the critical area of health care.”

The final destination of the approval journey is the Illinois Board of Higher Education (IBHE). The proposal was formally submitted to IBHE during the summer of 2007 with the expectation that a decision will be made early in 2008.
To help address the nurse faculty shortage by quickly moving students toward teaching positions, Illinois State University granted MCN approval to offer doctoral-level nursing courses on a temporary basis until the doctoral program is approved. The inaugural course at MCN was qualitative research design, offered in the fall of 2006 and taught by Dr. Caroline Mallory. Three students successfully completed the course. To further enhance the learning experience, the second course offered brought together three professors to share their experiences. Five students successfully completed health policy, which was offered in the spring of 2007 and taught by Ann Cary, Ph.D., MPH, RN, A-CCC, associate dean for academic affairs, graduate program director, director of MS/MPH Program, director of MPH Online, Program in Public Health Practice at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst; Brenda Recchia Jeffers, Ph.D., RN, professor and director, Graduate Program and Research and Scholarly Activities at MCN; and Nancy Ridlouer, Ph.D., RN, APRN, BC, FAAN, professor and former dean of MCN, Robert Wood Johnson Executive Fellow.

The course blended distance and traditional learning strategies to help minimize travel for students and increase the efficiency of completing their studies. “The use of real-time interactive video supplemented by Web-based asynchronous learning tools provides students with a rich learning environment that allows nursing experts from across the country to contribute to the University classroom experience,” said Jeffers.

The doctoral program continues to gain interest from potential students as evidenced by eight students enrolling in the fall 2007 course: theoretical basis of nursing research, taught by Sandi Burke Ph.D.,CNP, BC-ADM. Multiple recruiting events are planned for the coming year to enhance the pool of applicants.

To help prepare MCN faculty, students and staff for the anticipated Ph.D. program, the CDP grant staff coordinated numerous research and scholarship opportunities throughout the year. Monthly brown bag scholarship lunches served as the venue for speakers to share expertise related to research and scholarship. Individuals from the University’s Research and Sponsored Programs, Grants Accounting, and the Institutional Review Board, as well as faculty within MCN, provided a wealth of information.

“I most enjoyed the pre-MNRS presentations by our faculty who are also pre- and post-docs,” said Caroline Mallory, MCN interim associate dean and associate professor. “It was a great chance to hear about their work and provide a forum for constructive criticism in preparation for their formal presentations at research conferences.”

To aid in scholarly achievement, the CDP enlisted the help of external experts in the field. Barbara Resnick, Ph.D., CNP, FAAN, FAANP, conducted a grant writing seminar for faculty in April 2007. Resnick is a professor of nursing and adjunct associate professor for the Department of Epidemiology and Preventive Medicine at the University of Maryland. She also is a geriatric nurse practitioner and a member of the steering committee of the Gerontology Doctoral Program at her University. In January 2007, Dr. Zarina Hock joined the Doctoral Program Grant staff as an editing consultant. She met individually with faculty, staff and students to provide feedback and guidance on writing endeavors. Hock will continue in this role during the final year of the grant.

The collaborative effort with the University of Iowa continued to gain strength in the second year of the grant. Key partners at both institutions met regularly to discuss grant progress and future plans. Janet Specht, Ph.D., RN, associate professor at the University of Iowa, was the key speaker for a January 2007 mentoring workshop for MCN faculty.

“The mentoring workshop provided a great opportunity to explore together the concepts of mentoring, how they might be implemented and each of our experiences with mentors--what we would like to emulate and what we would change. It was a good day to think about how we can help students become nurse scientists through mentoring,” Specht said.

Faculty from MCN and UI took full advantage of the annual Midwest Nursing Research Association conference when they met to discuss the progress of the CDP and ideas for the final year. MCN administrators made a trip to Iowa to plan for the final year of the grant. According to Dr. Sara Campbell, “The visit to Iowa to discuss progress thus far, and plan for ongoing collaborative efforts was quite successful. Collaborative endeavors are hard work, but the outcomes can be fantastic!”

The doctoral program grant will enter the third and final year of funding with an enormous amount accomplished, but still much to do. Grant activities for the final year include student recruiting, offering of a third doctoral course, development of media material to announce and promote the program, continued faculty development, identification of funding sources for the college, faculty and students, and continued collaboration with the University of Iowa, College of Nursing. The “to-do list” will certainly grow with insight and recommendations from the administration, faculty, and staff whose imagination and dedication are making this program a reality.
